The Heart of Mid-Lothian at the Fifth

Avenue Theatre.

Boucleault's clever dramatization of Sir Walter Scott's romance, "The Heart of Mid-Lothian," was produced at this house last night to a crowded and fashionable audience. The story is a touching one, full of strong appeals to the sympathies of an audience. Its interest is, however, somewhat sad, and though the author, with his somewhat sad, and though the author, with his usual skill, has interwoven into the texture of his mutations enough numor to give relief to the more dramatic positions of his work, yet it is impossible to escape from the sense of sadness which overspreads the subject. The story of Edic Deans is too well known to need rehearsal, and the sympathy which has grown up in the popular heart with the unfortunate victim of a cruel law, as pictured by the novelist, is continued to the drama. The attention of the audience was fixed from the moment the curtain went up to the assault on the Tolbooth. It was evident that deep sympathy with the personages of the drama swallowed up all other feeling, and the sadness of the scenes was sunk in the intensity of the interest feit in the development of the story. The cast, too, was a remarkably strong one. It included nearly all the prominent members of the company. Miss Nina Varian was intrusted with the part of Emebeans, and displayed quite respectable dramatic sense in her rendition. Miss Davenport's Madge Wildfire was not a powerful realization. Somehow she conveyed too strongly the idea that she was a sade woman simulating madness. Mrs. Gilbert as Meg Murdochson was more satisfactory. Among the gentlemen Mr. Fisher as David Deans gave a simple, touching picture of the Scotch peasant, Bavid Deans, It was the more effective because of its naturalness and absence of effort after extreme effect, which sometimes mars this actor's work. Taken together the cast must be considered very good, though the Scotch accent seemed to puzzle some of the company. Mr. Hardenberg; Sharpitlaw, Mr. G. F. Devere; Geordie Robertson, Mr. Hart Comway; the Connset for the Defence, Mr. David Whiting; David Deans, Mr. Charles Fisher; Ratchiffe, the jailer, Mr. F. Hardenberg; Sharpitlaw, Mr. G. F. Devere; Geordie Robertson, Mr. Hart Comway; the Counset for the Defence, Mr. Louis James; Mr. Aembeld, Mr. Owen Faw. Mr. Louis James; Mr. Caroline of England, Miss Emily Rigi; Jeanie Deans, Mrs. Louis Alien; Eme D sual skill, has interwoven into the texture of his Booth's Theatre-Miss Kate Field's Second Appearance.

This talented lady made her second appearance at this theatre last evening as Peg worington in "Masks and Faces," supported by Mr. Charles Wacatleigh as Triplet, F. B. Warde as Sir Charles Pomander, Mr. Charles Rockwell as Ernest Vane, Mr. Sheppard as Colley Cibber and Ernest Vane, Mr. Sheppard as Colley Cibber and the other members of the stock company in the remaining roles. There were many evident signs of improvement in Miss Field's impersonation of the character. She has the desirable qualities of ease and confidence and her elocution is unimpeachable. It could not be well expected that at the outset of her dramatic career she would display that finish and magnetic attractiveness in the character that can only be attained by experience. There is much promise, however, in the lady's second essay on the stage.

Offenbach's New Opera; "Madame L'Archiduc."

Another work from the fertile pen of the father of opera bouffe was produced at the Bouffes Parisienne on October 31, with Mile, Judic in the ding role. M. Albert Millaud is the librettist. 'Madame L'Archiduc," the new piece, made a "Madame L'Archiduc," the new piece, made a great hit, a charming kissing quartet and Anale in the first act being vehemently applauded, and in the next act the sextet of the "Alphabet" attracting much praise. The composer has in this work avoided the fault so common with him of late years of seeking among his earlier works for melonic ideas. The seccess of the opera may be, in a great measure, attributed to the clever acting of Mesdames Judic and Grivot.

An Author's Complaint

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:theatrical managers has recently taken in regard to mustaches. Realism, conformity, demand their immolation on the altar of art.

So much for Buckingham—off with his mustache. But it is not so much in behalf of managers gen erally as it is in my own-as an author-and the the public's that I especially rejoice. For a long time my genius has been stowed away on a shell on account of the unaccountable prejudice on the part of actors to sacrifice some extrancous addition to their person. Years ago I wrote a play, the in-terest of which centred in the hero's having but to their person. Years ago I wrote a play, the interest of which centred in the hero's having but one ear; another followed it with one leg. The latter I wrote because of my inability to dispose of the former, except on the shelf, as already intimated. I soon found, however, that one leg was not enough to stand upon. Both these plays were great, as competent judges have certified, and that they were novel no one can dispute; yet I could induce no actor to take either. Booth, Jefferson, Wallack. Davenport and Mayo were at first successively solicited to take the plays, but all refused. I then went among actors of less reputation, but again lailed of success. Here was a way to rise for any young actor who had any rise in him; their persistent refusal was like finging away ambition. The older ones rejected an opportunity to win such a name as none of the profession ever before attained; their position on the greased pole of fame would have been away up in the clouds. More recently I dramatized Edmund About's "Notary's Nose." My enforts to give some one tame were again unrewarded.

Now, Mr. Editor, and through you unprejudiced public, why have my struggies to create a new school of drama been insuccessful? Without a moment's hesitation I answer for you, because of the variety of actors who are unwilling to make any sacrifice of what they consider a physical embellishment to their art; a sacrifice which, in the instance above alluded to, would have resulted in the elevation of the drama, the actor's undying fame (to say nothing of his fortune), and the eniertainment as well as instruction of an appreciative public. For these reasons i neartily sympathize with the motive of the manager whose action called forth this brief history.
